

Julius Schutten really wants a new Vitesse t-shirt. As a dedicated fan of the Dutch soccer club, he's been dreaming of wearing the latest jersey to support his team in style. Every time he sees someone sporting the black and yellow, he feels a pang of envy and a renewed desire to get his own.

Instead, Julius keeps buying Kleenex for his little brother. With an endless cold that never seems to go away, his brother goes through tissues like water. Julius has become a regular at the store, sacrificing his jersey dreams for sniffles and sneezes.
